There a few new additions to the church library, one being Jordon Peterson's "12 Rules for Life" which I really enjoyed over the summer. Whilst this is not a Christian Book, Peterson does delve into scripture at times to shed light on issues that we face in life. I particularly liked his pondering on the brokenness of humanity at the Fall: "Perhaps it is not simply the emergence of self-consciousness and the rise if our moral knowledge of Death and the Fall that besets us and makes us doubt our own worth. Perhaps it is instead our unwillingness – reflected in Adam's shamed hiding – to walk with God, despite our fragility and propensity for evil." Food for thought.
God bless, David
